

In collaboration with the Global South Center at the Pratt Institute, the Center for the Study of Ethnicity and Race presents

The Decolonization Series

MONDAY, APRIL 10, 5PM
Sulzberger Parlor
Barnard Hall, 3rd Floor
Barnard College

WATER STRUGGLES

A panel discussion contending with water not simply as a non-renewable resource or commodity of extractive capitalism, but as the life and death operations of radicalized vernacular and native struggle. Panelists will speak on racial capitalism and the poisoning of Flint, Michigan's water, social movements against the disappearance of rivers in Columbia and Chile, and the struggle of the Standing Rock Sioux against the Dakota Access Pipeline

Speakers

LAURA PULIDO, University of Oregon | Author of Environmentalism and Economic Justice: Two Chicano Struggles in the Southwest, and Black and Brown in Los Angeles: Beyond Conflict and Coalition

MACARENA GÓMEZ-BARRIS, The Pratt Institute | Author of Where Memory Dwells: Culture and State Violence in Chile and The Extractive Zone: Social Ecologies and Decoloniality (forthcoming)

JASKIRAN DHILLON, The New School | Author of Prairie Rising: Indigenous Youth, Decolonization, and the Politics of Intervention

Moderated by MAY JOSEPH, The Pratt Institute | Author of Nomadic Identities: The Performance of Citizenship, and Fluid New York: Cosmopolitan Urbanism and the Green Imagination